Urban students often lack the availability of quality high nutrition valued foods and understanding. This is directly correlated to the lack of knowledge on how to plan, develop, or manage a home garden. Who do students turn to help them design, plan, implement, and tweak their projects?

Teaching Growing America offers teachers the opportunity to brainstorm their own program drawing on the expertise of an existing program and a well-structured approach to building projects. Teachers also have the opportunity to experience student activities associated with the summer bridge program.
